These Exemplary Practices for Military Populations (EPMP) document is intended to serve as a resource. It provides counselors a framework of foundational principles and practices to help identify exemplary practices in counseling military-connected clients. It is not intended or expected that each of the numerous listed 'exemplary practices' be treated as a separate absolute requirement. Rather, the statements in this EPMP document are intended to identify ideal goal levels of practice for counselors to seek to attain. In this way, these exemplary practices can be thought of as aspirational goals towards which practicing counselors can work, as opposed to absolute standards. That said, as counselors consider undertaking clients in this area, they are reminded to review their particular counseling competency in light of the following as exemplary practices.

EPMP represents all military populations including Active Duty, Reserve Components, Veterans, retired military members, and military families; and counselors should interpret each practice with understanding of foundational differences in experiences among these military populations. Counselors working with military populations can use the EPMP as a resource in their clinical and ethical decision-making processes, as well as for training and supervision purposes. In October 2016, the Military and Government Counseling Association (MGCA) appointed a Task Force to develop the exemplary practices. The Task Force member composition was intentional to capture the diverse experiences of military-connected counselors and counselor educators. The Task Force followed a structured process in the development of the exemplary practices including: review of previous counselor competencies endorsed by the American Counseling Association (ACA), review of the current research related to counseling military populations, conceptualization for a framework of exemplary practices, formulation of exemplary practices, and feedback with MGCA board members and reviewers representative of MGCA members at-large.

The intention of the EPMP is to provide a research-based set of guidelines that represent military considerations through the lens of a counselor professional identity: a strength-based philosophy grounded in principles of empowerment, wellness, prevention, and development. The framework for the EPMP is organized by seven core components: military culture, ethics, system features, assessment of presenting concerns, identity development, treatment, and advocacy. Additionally, to further counselors' developing knowledge and understanding of military structure and language, an overview of military key terms are defined.

1. Military Culture represents general information about the functioning and worldview of military service members and their families.

The professional counselor:

- a. Can identify the Active Duty service branches of the U.S. armed forces, and understands that each branch adheres to specialized structures, roles, ranks, and terms.
- b. Is aware that differences in military culture exist between each branch of service.
- c. Is aware that differences in experiences may exist between Veterans who previously served and Service members/Veterans who currently serve, as well as Veterans who served in different eras.
- d. Acknowledges values, beliefs, traditions, and functions of the military that influence the client's worldview.
- e. Is aware of the mission-first value system of the military.
- f. Acknowledges sacrifice, honor, and humility as values for Service members.
- g. Recognizes the importance of collectivism within the military culture, including a desire to limit risk or harm to others.
- h. Explores the introjection of military culture in the client's personal and professional functioning.
- i. Respects the individual motivations of Service members to enlist or commission in the military, as well as their individual experiences during their time in service and decision to leave or retire from the military.
- j. Recognizes the unique within group cultural differences of Service members including gender, race, ethnicity, age, education, sexual orientation, socio-economic status, ability-status, and religious/spiritual orientation.
- k. Understands the potential for variance in the resources and support systems available to Reserve Component Service members.
- l. Seeks education on the training methods and objectives of military operations, including potential differences among combat zones.
- m. Is aware of the potential for differing worldviews between Service members and civilians.

When working in military employment settings, the professional counselor:

- n. Is aware of, respects, and adheres to military base policy, protocol, and standard etiquette practices.

- 2. Identity Development represents the whole person concept of military life including one's personal identity as a Service member and connection to mission and core values of working as a military Service member across the lifespan.

The professional counselor:

- a. Understands that the military experience may be fused into all aspects of self, including cognitive, behavioral, affective, social, and spiritual components.
- b. Respects that Service members may integrate their core sense of self with military

- b. Is aware of unique characteristics of military families including demographics such as age of marriage and blended families, which may vary by branch and type of service.
- c. Is aware of the complex nature of stressors faced by military families including factors related to separation and relocation.
- d. Understands that Reserve Component families must often negotiate the complexities of two worlds, both civilian and military, with varying degrees for structural support from both worlds.
- e. Understands the high level of adaptation and resiliency skills are beneficial for military families to meet the common demands of military lifestyle including stress, uncertainty, and frequent separations.
- f. Is aware of the roles and expectations experienced by military families including factors such as separation, career evolution, and transition.
- g. Is aware that dual-military marriages may be characterized by unique challenges such as the de-synchronization of training, deployment, and advancement opportunities, given the need to balance the goals and duties of both military careers and familial obligations.
- h. Is aware of the unique identity developed by children raised in military households and challenges placed on military families that may have lasting impact in adulthood
- i. Is aware of the potential physical, cognitive, and emotional demands of military service and the resulting impact, on self and others, of serving in a high-risk occupation.
- j. Understands potential of familial impact related to military retirement including the implications of the type of discharge from the military as well as medical retirement.
- k. Respects the unique and sometimes challenging decisions military families make in service of their fellow Service members, community, state, and country.
- l. Understands that the custody of children in military families may be impacted by and/or conservatorship may become necessary due to training and deployment of military caregivers.

4. Assessment of Presenting Concerns represents common areas of clinical concerns that Service members frequently present when seeking mental health services.

- h. Recognizes that alcohol is the most prevalent substance Veterans misuse and frequently co-occurs with other mental health concerns and suicidality.
- i. Is aware that the unique stressors and differences in each branch of service may influence presentation of symptoms, high-risk behaviors, and access to resources.
- j. Has awareness of current military sexual trauma (MST) rates among women and men Service members and recognizes that increased mental health disorders are often observed in those who have experienced MST.
- k. Becomes knowledgeable of the variances in current suicide statistics among Active Duty, Reserve Components, Veterans, retired military members, and military families when compared to national statistics.

5. Treatment represents general information about unique concerns that may arise in the treatment of military-affiliated clients and approaches supported by research for military populations, including best practices of military care systems, as well as holistic, wellness-oriented services.

The professional counselor:

- a. Is aware of evidence-based treatments utilized by the U.S. Department of Defense and U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs.
- b. Recognizes that treatment needs may include a range of presenting concerns prevalent among Service members (e.g., sensory impairment, decreased memory/concentration, headaches, sleep disturbance, physical symptoms, and interpersonal isolation).
- c. Is aware of the adjunctive interdisciplinary services (e.g., occupational therapy, physical therapy, command consultation, embedded behavioral health, chaplaincy, and peer support) available within the U.S. Department of Defense and U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs.
- d.

- c. Recognizes personal values and attitudes of war policies; addresses potential prejudices about military service or war; and brackets their own political opinions of current and previous combat operations.
- d. Seeks consultation and supervision when ethical challenges arise specific to military populations.
- e. Remains mindful of legal requirements (see Federal Regulations and U.S. Department of Defense disclosure laws) in documentation and disclosure of records to service members' commands, medical board, or military court.
- f. Actively adheres to a self-care routine to prevent burnout, depersonalization, compassion fatigue, and impairment.
- g. Who also identifies as military-connected, assesses for and addresses potential countertransference.

When working in military employment settings, the professional counselor:

- h. Considers the potential impact to power differentials when taking leadership or administrative duties.
- i. Clarifies multiple-roles in informed consent documentation and develops a collaborative plan with Service members for handling boundary crossings.
- j. Is prepared to discontinue personal relationships with colleagues when clinical services are required.
- k. Adheres to minimum disclosure requirements and need-to-know policies developed by Federal Regulations and the U.S. Department of Defense with attention to permissive language.
- l. Accepts the implications of determining fitness for duty status, honoring the client-counselor relationship in the process.
- m. Adheres to the clinical practice guidelines of employment setting with attention to flexibility within the protocols when in the best interest of the client.
- n. Considers community referrals when in the best interest of the client, when possible.

7. Advocacy represents counselors' ability to understand and influence individual, system, and public policy efforts to increase access to mental health resources for military-connected clients and promote the role of counseling professionals working with military populations.

The professional counselor:

- a. Advocates for strength-based, wellness approaches when counseling military-connected clients.
- b. Advocates for the development and accessibility of mental health care for military populations, with specific attention to family members, such as children.
- c. Forms collaborations among agencies serving military-connected clients.
- d. Compiles reputable non-VA resources to provide military-connected clients.
- e. Understands the complexity associated with VA Benefits programs and advocates with clients to receive the assistance to which they are entitled, as appropriate.
- f. Supports initiatives for trainings to decrease stigma associated with mental health within military populations.
- g. Supports initiatives for diversity trainings to generate positive cultural change, including the decrease of cultural stigmas of diverse individuals within military populations.
- h. Considers training opportunities to increase counselor competence among trainees and professionals working with military-connected clients.

- i. Supports prevention programs that connect military family members to the community.
- j. Advocates to change laws that conflict with counselors' ethical codes.
- k. Advocates to maintain the inclusion of counselors as mental health providers for military populations.
- l. Actively assists Active Duty, Reserve Components, Veterans, retired military members, and military families in appropriate self-advocacy strategies.

MILITARY DEFINITIONS

MILITARY EMPLOYMENT

Twelve Types of Military Service include five Active Duty service branches and seven part-time service branches. Part-time duty includes five Reserve forces and two Guard branches.

Active Duty service branches refer to Air Force, Army, Coast Guard, Marine Corps, and Navy.

Reserve Forces refers to the Air Force Reserve, Army Reserve, Coast Guard Reserve, Marine Corps Reserve, and Navy Reserve. Members of the Reserve are citizens who combine a military role or career with a civilian career. They are not normally kept under arms and their main role is to be available to fight when the nation mobilizes for war or to defend against invasion. Members of the Reserve forces are civilians who maintain military skills by training, typically one weekend a month and two weeks a year.

National Guard consists of two separate entities: the Air National Guard and the Army National Guard. The National Guard are Reserve components belonging to a particular state. State governors or territorial adjutant generals hold the authority call National Guard members to Active Duty for state missions such as responding to natural disasters. However, during times of war or national emergencies the National Guard can be called to Active Duty at the behest of Congress, the President, or the Secretary of Defense, thus they are a dual state-federal force.

Reserve Components of the Armed Forces are the Reserve forces and National Guard entities collectively referenced.

Enlisted Service members are those who joined the service and signed a contract of enlistment for a specific period of time. They are assigned to specific occupations within their service branch and can be considered the "workforce" of the military. Enlisted service members follow the orders of officers and tend to have specific jobs within the projects assigned.

Noncommissioned Officers (NCOs) are enlisted Service members who obtain their positions of authority by promotion. They are the primary leaders for most of the military personnel. They are in charge or control as opposed to command their units. They insure their subordinates are properly trained and cared for and can do their assigned jobs proficiently.

Warrant Officers (WOs) are initially appointed to the rank of officer by a warrant from the Secretary of a Service as opposed to by a commission from the President of the United States. Warrant officers are technical experts in specific, critical fields such as pilot or imagery interpretation. Warrant officers are higher ranking than enlisted members, but lower ranking than the lowest commissioned officer rank. The Air Force no longer uses the warrant officer grade.

Commissioned Officers (Cos) hold commissions from the President of the United States and are confirmed by the Senate. They have completed a college bachelor's degree and have either completed Officer Candidate School (OCS), ROTC, graduated from a service academy for their branch of service, or received a direct commission. Commissioned officers are considered leaders of those who have enlisted status and may be viewed as managers of projects.

Pay grade is an administrative organization system to create standards for salary compensation, in which higher pay grade numbers represent higher pay.

Rank is an organization system that denotes the level of responsibility or authority of the individual. Rank corresponds with pay grade; therefore, also follows the ascending order in which a higher pay grade number indicates a ranking with more responsibility. See Tables 1 and 2.

Military Occupation Specialty code (MOS) references the specific job a service member is assigned to in the Army and Marines. In the Navy and Coast Guard the term is and the Air Force uses the term .

Military Discharge denotes the way in which Service members are released from their obligation to the military. Many, but not all, discharged individuals may be eligible for benefits. Eligibility for benefits is assessed by the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs. For example, Service members with a service-related injury may be entitled to a degree of disability pay.

DD214 is a Report of Separation issued by the Department of Defense upon a Service member's discharge, separation, or retirement. The DD214 provides information needed to verify benefits, retirement, and employment.

Honorable discharge indicates that a Service member has met or exceeded conduct or performance standards and will be eligible for all benefits upon discharge.

General discharge under honorable conditions indicates that a Service member is considered to have satisfactorily met conduct or performance standards and will be eligible for most benefits upon discharge.

General discharge under other than honorable conditions indicates that a Service member is considered to have fallen below conduct or performance standards and will be eligible for benefits pending review from the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs.

Dishonorable discharge is a punitive discharge which indicates that a Service member has been convicted by a court-martial conducted by the military and is not eligible for benefits upon sentencing.
